- Great potential within the AXXERON Group through synergies and cooperation
- HESCH look optimistically into the future

Unna, October 15, 2020 - AXXERON Technologies GmbH, an active management holding company focusing on acquisitions and the operational development of innovative medium-sized companies, is acquiring the HESCH Group, a model company in industrial automation. With the objective of creating solutions for holistic systems and networking of applications, AXXERON concentrates on industrial automation, fluid technology, sensor technology as well as specialized component and assembly suppliers and integrates the corresponding portfolio companies.

HESCH with its headquarters in Neustadt a. R. has been considered a highly innovative medium-sized company for over 40 years. What began with a brilliant idea of the founder Walter Schröder in 1976 has developed into a respected company with more than 60 qualified employees. The company is a specialist in the development and production of electronic measuring and control devices as well as systems and equipment for industrial automation.

"HESCH ideally complements our portfolio, especially the FLUID TECHNOLOGY business unit. The company is excellently positioned and we see a variety of synergy effects with our group. We cannot wait to define the next growth targets together with the HESCH management", explains Mr. Markus Dreischer, Managing Director of AXXERON Technologies.

For the implementation of its strategic goals, the industrial company will in future be able to draw on the know-how and expertise of the AXXERON team and all portfolio companies. The cooperations allow economies of scale without limiting the flexibility of the individual companies.

In addition, AXXERON's management will be responsible for managing the business within the Group so that the exploitation of synergies and the management of volatility can be developed into a key success factor.
